Dear all,

I will be consulting with Diana and others over how to move this forward and will get back to you once we have more information to design and implement a strategy.

Many thanks Diana!

Hi Diana, all,

Agreed, and thanks for moving us along! eScholarship already does some alerting for those of us with accounts, so be sure the OpenUCLA is integrated.

Note that we have established the IS dept eScholarship site already; it just needs to be populated with other members' pubs. Jillian, Morgan, Milena, and I have done the necessary construction work and are happy to help move it along. The process from here is rather simple — not a major project at this stage.

Hi All,

I met with Marty Brennan last week to discuss the nitty-gritty of eScholarship. He has proposed that our department could be a pilot site for rolling out Open UCLA, which will be launching soon. I am awaiting some materials from him, which I'll put into a report outlining options, along with pros and cons. We talked about how being a leader in Open UCLA compliance could raise the visibility of the IS Dept at a time when we need to elevate our reputation and assure Campus that we are making great strides in key initiatives. I stressed the importance of minimizing the time and effort required for adhering to UCLA's open access policy for both faculty and staff. We discussed the potential for automated prompts like those used by Researchgate, which make it much easier for faculty to participate. The algorithm finds articles likely written by the faculty member and asks whether he/she is the author. One advantage of being a guinea pig is that they (the eScholarship team) would help us get existing articles into the database, so we would be able to continue with very little effort. Anyway, I'll share more when I get the specific details from Marty. I made no commitments, just fact finding.

Best,
Diana

Hi Chris,

It might not happen immediately, but it is on my to-do list. I will definitively reach out when we have figured out a strategy.

Many thanks,
Jean-François

Hi JFB,

I've been a nag about getting our dept pubs posted for a decade or so — happy to move along in any way possible! much easier to do than when we started. Morgan, Nataly, and I can give a simple demo and talk through the goals at a fac mtg, for ex.

thanks for moving forward,

Chris

Hi Chris,

This is definitively something that we need to discuss as a department.

Dear Anne, JF, Johanna, and
Diana,

We get fabulous visibility for the CKI and for the rest of my work from the eScholarship deposits. We rebuilt the site a year or so ago to put all our work under the IS dept, as we migrated from bepress. See stats below. 800+ requests in Feb alone.

However, it does not appear that anyone else has deposited anything for our dept site — Jonathan is admin, can be changed or added, now that Diana is on board.

eScholarship is even more central to UC access with the termination of the Elsevier contract, so a great opportunity to increase our visibility!
